

for Italians studying in Italy. And the third one which is also important is to organize from time to time seminars of topical nature [ääähm] in Rome and in London [ääähm] which would sort of bring together the top experts to discuss in an informal way. This is like the workings of a think tank. Why I am doing this? The major, my major profession how would I call it, expertise has always been that of, what I would call, track to diplomacy, which is bringing not the governments directly in touch with each other, but individuals, institutions. I'm member of the European council of foreign relations, member of at that time member of the European Council on foreign relations, member as well of [äääh] PITB the business and diplomacy area in the UK, all of this I think was extremely important. Why was this so important, because this was the kind of decisions and discussions that would take place and in an informal setting where people discuss sometimes openly topical issues which are of major consent then. During the meeting, during meetings I did not had the opportunity of meeting with George Papadopoulos during the official meetings. But during the dinner, there was an official dinner, [äääh] given by Prof. Vincenzo Scotti former minster, former state secretary [ääähm] which was hosted in a top Italian restaurant. During this dinner I was asked to co-host a table, because there were two tables, one table was Prof. Scotti, second one with Nagi and [äääh] the rest of the team, some of the team. And I sat down with a number of other people coming from London Centre of International Law Practice. During this meeting George and I not even sat next to each other, so this was [äääh] and we, during the meetings we discussed general topics from China to Asia to, to, various, Africa, migration, GALF, Ukraine, so we discussed a number of issues, which were topical at that stage.

Dr. Roh: Can you state who came from LCILP?

Prof. Mifsud: I don't remember all the names, but a list can be found of these people [ähm]. There were a number of people, professors from the United States, lawyers from the United States, people who work in Geneva in the strategic and international relations, people coming from London. So it was a mixed group which was chosen by Nagi. Was not [äääh], this were the guest topic, whoever to be the experts attached to the topics to be developed in Rome and in London together with Link Campus. That was the idea. After the meeting [ähm] as we were leaving the restaurant I had the opportunity, because you know we started discussing about who does what, okay., I met informally, because this was the ..., I met I mean we discussed informally going out of the restaurant the fact that [ääähm] that George Papadopoulos was going to be attached to [äääh] because I did not know by then that he was a member of a campaign or anything like that [äääh] I got to know later for example about many other things [äääh] that he was going to join the [äääh] Mr. Trump's campaign. And we discussed the possibility of organizing, and he said he was very interested, and his brief was going to be energy and I believe he spoke briefly to be about which the continued our discussion, about the project that he had involving Greece, Lebanon, Jordan, Israel, about the sharing of energy fields within the east... ring.

Dr. Roh: Can you disclose or did you know if he works for other institutions than LCILP?

Prof. Mifsud: Yes, I believe that he either from him or from Nagi because I did ask, okay. He, I was informed, I was told that he is member or he had worked at the Atlantic counsel which is a think tank. So a think tank like any others which has good corporations within a number of countries in the world.
